Challenging oppressive ideology can take many forms. As can psychological warfare. For example, there is a school of thought that espouses denial of much that makes us human. For those who endorse this philosophy, life is basically a drudgery of suppression and paranoia. Unable to reconcile their humanity, such individuals (or groups) are quite clearly nothing more than hearsay spouting victims of mind control.

Since our primitive ancestors first depicted their existence on the walls of their subterranean domiciles, the human form has dominated the vast majority of artistic output. Nonetheless, there have been egregious campaigns throughout history which have sought to suppress this most natural of human activities.

Even today in a supposedly worldwide culture of inclusion and tolerance, there are many ideological oppressors seeking to compel humanity. The explosion of accessible 'art content' distributed via the internet has evoked a reaction from numerous unelected censors.

One of which would be the self titled 'most dangerous anthropologist in the world, Mr. Robert Sepehr of Youtube. Robert features many videos on his channel covering a variety of topics from forbidden archaeology to esoteric divination. With alarming frequency, his content includes bromidic lectures on 'the use of pornography and other forms of degeneracy'. More often than not, this follows some blatant product placement. From solitary dining in his ongoing mission to advertise every place he has every eaten, to three minute drone intros following his recently acquired electric vehicle.

Fortunately the third law of Newtons classical mechanics emerges in defence of freedom of thought. In Robert's case this equal and opposite reaction is personified in the form of Kaitlyn Michelle Siragusa AKA Amouranth. While Kaitlyn does not cater to those pursuing mind expansion, her work does represent a particularly unique rebuttal to such mealy mouthed lolly gagging. Due to the staggering revenue her multimedia output generates, all major social media platforms are forced to contend with this phenomenon in tight leggings.

Those who continue to assert that such content represents a reduction in moral fibre and erosion of civilisation, have no recourse whatsoever. In fact the terms and conditions of all these platforms clearly state what is permitted and what is not.

"Video that contains nudity or other sexual content may be allowed if the primary purpose is educational, documentary, scientific, or artistic, and it isn't gratuitously graphic"

Therefore such groups and / or individuals seeking to oppress the appreciation of art are seen for what they truly are: anti-humanity, anti-personality and just downright anti-capitalism.

*Addendum

Once again, the needle on the irony meter is in danger of smashing through the maximum pin on the gauge. The unprecedented growth of the internet represents a massive leap in mankinds ability to abandon mind control and embrace the age of reason. Since the earliest days of online consumerism, adult content has facilitated many, many more transactions than any other retail market. Hosting companies have risen to prominence based purely on their non judgemental provision of storage and support for adult content. Any ill conceived protestations by the fuddy-duddies generally alludes to the corruption of minds and the popularisation of sinister content. This only underlines the abject ignorance of such tub-thumpers because the vast majority (by a huge margin) of adult content billing is based on entirely legal, consentual and overtly heterosexual content. Furthermore, the hosting industry is ardently self policing. Anyone diverging from the terms and conditions is rapidly identified and reported to the relevant authorities. Even the so called 'dark web' which primarily consists of self hosted .onion websites no longer features anything more sinister than content readily available on mainstream porn sites.

The holier than thou attitude displayed by self appointed detractors implies a puritanical approach, however their true motivations have probably got more to do with global depopulation than anything truly pious. A perfect example comes in the form of the campaign against RockStar Games which featured vicious attacks on the makers of Grand Theft Auto (San Andreas). Due to the hidden mini-game which came to be known as 'Hot Coffee' featuring pseudo sexual content, the campaign attracted some high profile support from Hilary Clinton. Anyone familiar with the criticism of the Clintons will be aware of the many accusations of an extensive body count incurred by this supposedly respectable couple.
